It wasn't who you sat next to,
the venue, the music, or the decorations.

And it certainly wasn't the food.

It probably wasn't even what you were there to honor or celebrate.

It was the emcee.

They weren't over the top, or cheesy,
or slow speaking, or long-winded,
or inappropriate, or overly personal,
or drunk.

They were concise, personable,
and enthusiastic, but in a casual way.

They did a great job of reminding you why you were there, and they made the program flow and move along without feeling frenetic.

They made a few off-hand, in-the-moment jokes that were actually funny and you left thinking at the end of the day - wow. That was a good fucking event.

They made an event that you frankly weren't that excited about attending...fun.

So instead of getting the funny co-worker to host your big company meeting, that parent who's really funny at drop-offs to emcee your school event, or hiring someone who's a professional at being on stage, but not your kind of stage,

call us.

We're some of the best, if not the best,
emcees / hosts / masters of ceremony
in Portland.

We're B. Frayn Masters - host of nonprofit benefits for clients like Literary Arts and Rock-n-Roll Camp for Girls. Producer and host of Back Fence PDX, Russian Roulette and Moth GrandSLAMs. Performance coach and speech writer for entrepreneurs, athletes, & executives, including speakers for the Democratic National Convention. And an audience-voted winner of WW's "Best of" in the Storytelling/ Spoken Word category (2015).

We're Mindy Nettifee – creative writing and performance teacher for Literary Arts, producer for Back Fence PDX, cohost of Russian Roulette, host for the Moth, and an award winning performance poet who has toured the US and Europe, plus a 15-year veteran of planning and hosting fundraisers and events for orgs like Habitat for Humanity, GLAAD, and the ACLU.

And we're Andrew Dickson – also a host of Moth storytelling shows, as well as emcee and auctioneer of school auctions, nonprofit fundraisers, and corporate awards shows. Not to mention a creative director and copywriter who works with clients like Apple, Adidas, and Wieden+Kennedy.
